A DEMOCRATIC MAKEUP.

The Birth Murder Case Used as Ammunition for Their Campaign.

Last week a red-hot lioness meeting was held at Rockville, Md., and the faithful poured out their denunciations of the republicans with full measure. Among the instantiations against them was the treatment received by the colored people in this city and in the power granted to them. As an illustration the colored men could do as they pleased here, defy the law and go unpunished, the case of the parties convicted of the murder of George P. Hirth was presented. It was charged that the republicans had interfered in their behalf and the prospect was that they would be pardoned instead of executed.

A lawyer from this city was present at the meeting, and after the speaker had boldly made the above assertions had concluded his remarks, asked the privilege of saying a few words, which was accorded him. He prefaced his speech by saying that there was only one point stated by the previous speaker to which he desired to reply, and that was in relation to the murder of Mr. Hirth. He said that the parties arrested, tried and convicted were arrested by republicans. The indictment against them was found by a grand jury composed of white and colored men, more than two-thirds of that body being republicans. They were tried before a republican judge, prosecuted by a republican district attorney, and the jury that returned a verdict of guilty of murder against them was composed of white and colored men, and nearly all of them were republicans. The case was appealed to the supreme court of the District, and the judges thereof, republican in politics, affirmed the judgment of the court below. The three men, he said, would have been hung long ago had it not been for three democratic lawyers, who have been engaged ever since to save them, and who are now in the United States and attorney-general to commute the sentence to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life if a full pardon could not be obtained. These were the facts in the case, and he would leave it to an impartial mind to decide whether or not it was democratic or republican injustice in this District.

Nothing more was said at that meeting, and unlimited privilege being permitted to colored people in this city and their open and flagrant violation of the law. The contradiction was a settler for the republicans. The colored people of this city have no sympathy with criminals and believe, white or colored, that they should be punished. Facts show that the republicans are more than a democratic mind to divide whether or not it was democratic or republican injustice in this District.

A MERCURY COURT.

Last week a German named Emil Hirth was brought on to the police court. He was not only shown in the evidence that the man understood very little English, but at the time of the difficulty with the officer was in a deep domestic trouble. He did not comprehend the position of the officer, and in his ignorance did what technically might be called personal violence to the guardian of the peace. The jury in returning a verdict of guilty recommended him to the kindest mercy of the court.

The man was brought before Justice James in the criminal court for sentence yesterday morning. Assistant District Attorney Perry called the attention of his honor to the case, the recommendation by the jury, and said that he thought it a case deserving of leniency. The court stated that it was evident that this man could only with difficulty understand the English language.

It was also evident that on the occasion of this trouble he had been drinking, and that combined with distress for the condition of his wife, probably placed him in a situation which to some extent excused his conduct. His honor then admonished him to refrain from drink and strive to become a good citizen. He should impose a fine of $1, only a nominal one, and hope that some gentleman would furnish the means to pay it.

At this juncture Bailiff Seale stepped up and handed Hirth a dollar bill. The man, who had been crying during the trial, then turned to the clerk, emptied the money and handed it to the clerk. Assistant District Attorney Perry said that he had intended to pay the fine himself, but as some one else had volunteered to do it he handed the dollar that he held in his hand to Hirth. The man seemed entirely overcome with the kindness received, and left the chamber thanking the court, officers and all those who had been so kind to him in his misfortune.

A SEQUEL TO THE EXODUS.

How North Carolina Democrats are Trying to Reclaim the Fugitives.

A requisition from the governor of North Carolina for Samuel L. Perry, wanted in that state on the charge of forgery, arrived here yesterday in the hands of Sheriff George K. Bigby. Chief Justice Carter issued a warrant. The man was arrested by Bailiff Dorsey and brought before his honor, sitting in chambers, at 2 o'clock. Hon. Jere Wilson and Professor B. T. Greenes appeared for the accused and R. S. Davis, esq., for the state of North Carolina. The indictment accompanying the requisition charges that Samuel L. Perry on December 20, 1878, forged an order, in the name of the school committee, on the treasurer of Lenoir county, directing him to pay out of the public-school money, to the credit of school district No. 15, for the colored people, $45 for pay of Aaron E. Perry as teacher. Mr. Wilson stated that he was not ready to proceed with the hearing, having just come into the case, and to allow him time to prepare an adjournment was taken until to-morrow noon.

When the circumstances connected with the action of the North Carolina authorities is investigated a little, as has been done, it looks very much like a case of political persecution. Perry in the first place denies that he ever committed the forgery and he is positively asked for a trial within the past few years, but failed to obtain one. He, shortly after the indictment was found, was placed under $100 bonds to appear, and was then told that he would be notified when wanted. Such notification has never reached him. In 1878 and the early part of 1879 he lived in North Carolina and under the law he had nothing to excite the ire of the "tar heels." But in the summer of 1879 he was less fortunate. Seeing the degradation and actual slavery to which his people were subjected, he determined to assist in their emancipation. It could be accomplished, he, together with P. C. Williams, began and carried out effect the exodus movement. They had together large numbers of fugitives, with the assistance of outside help, much of which came to this city, had been transported to the state of Indiana. Perry and Williams made no secret of the matter, and were not only people located and secure their employment. In this respect they were remarkably successful. All this time Perry was traveling and from North Carolina he had just reached Washington to release his colored brethren from bondage. The indictment was made law among the court files, but not a word was said about bringing him to trial, and the case was until recently it was supposed that the case would never be heard of again. Recently there was an election in the state of Indiana, and the news is just reached North Carolina, also the fact that all the colored people emigrating there a year or more ago voted, and cast their ballots in favor of the republican candidate. The "tar heels" heard this, and realized the fact that Perry was the main-spring of that movement, it seemed determined to "get even" with him for the part that he had taken in bringing about the exodus of the colored people. The old indictment was hunted up, a requisition obtained and the sheriff sent here to get him. Perry and yesterday that he had no fear as to the result of a trial in this city. ## CALLING THE LAWYERS TO ME.

Justice James Gives a Sharp Reminder to Prosecutors to Proceed.

Yesterday in the criminal court Assistant District Attorney Perry called the attention of the court to the fact that little attention was paid to the assignment of the attorneys, and the government found considerable difficulty in prosecuting its cases on that account. Causes were placed on the calendar, and when called for trial the counsel in them would find delay on account of not being prepared to proceed, and offering as an excuse that they did not know the case was on the assignment. He asked the court to take some action to remedy the trouble. His honor replied that he had been noticing the condition of affairs for some time, and had come to the conclusion that it was time to take some action to remedy the trouble. He noted that hardly any of the gentlemen practicing at the bar were present in court that morning. Probably they might have received intimation of his contemplated order and remained away. If that was a fact, then he should try and reach them in some other way. In the future he said that the government should be called to the attention of the court and inform the court, and the same courtesy would be shown as had always been observed when the circumstance warranted. But when it came to call the counsel to come in and offer their excuses for a further postponement. He thought the rule would be inflexibly enforced, that cases assigned for trial would be prosecuted, and when called for trial, unless some cause had previously been offered for delay.
